WINDY ROADS

The ambivalent relationship of Union citizenship and Member State nationality

28-30 January 2026

Concept

Introduced with the Treaty of Maastricht some 30 years ago, Union citizenship is intertwined with the Member States' nationalities. Following the letters of the EU Treaties, it is no freestanding, but a derived status: Union citizens are those who possess the nationality of a Member State (Article 9 TEU). While the Court of Justice ascertained already in 2001 that Union citizenship is destined to become the "fundamental status" of the nationals of the Member States, the past 30 years have demonstrated that Union citizenship follows no linear development towards this destiny. Instead, the relationship of Union citizenship and Member State nationality is ambivalent and subject to many, sometimes contradictory trajectories. Some have strengthened the status of Union citizenship, others have reinforced the relevance of Member State nationalities. With other words: these concepts travel on windy roads.

This conference aims at mapping these windy roads. On the one hand, we can observe a renaissance of nationality. Consider the restriction of the rights of economically inactive Union citizens by the EU legislature and the Court of Justice (Dano and its progenies) or the consequences of Brexit, which demonstrated the precarity of Union citizenship (Préfet du Gers) and led to a flood of naturalisation requests in continental Europe.

On the other hand, the rights flowing from Union citizenship, free movement and equality, have increasingly expanded. Today, Union citizenship has developed beyond a mere status for mobile and economically active "market citizens". We can even witness the forming of EU requirements not only for the loss and acquisition of the Member States' nationalities (Commission v Malta), but also for political rights in national elections (see the infringement proceedings against Poland and the Czech Republic over the right of Union citizens to join a political party in another Member State). In this sense, even core domains of Member State nationality, such as naturalisation requirements and political rights attached to that status, are no longer immune from European influence.

Some of these cases are well-studied, some might say over-explored. However, we do not aim at simply revisiting these "classics". By zooming out and assessing them with temporal distance, we seek to understand their impact and interplay in the long term. Ultimately, we are placing these diverging trajectories in a bigger framework that might allow us to identify the direction in which Union citizenship and Member State nationality are heading. Finally, we want to explore future paths in this relationship. What is their role in an emerging European society, what are their potentials and promises, what are their dangers and risks?
